An industrial-style home. Raw steel is softened by warm wood in the interior.

Industrial style is associated with austere yet spacious interiors. In the home shown below, the austerity of the loft interiors is softened by warm wood and soft textiles. The result is a stylish yet cozy space for the family.

However, the raw, industrial elements found their full expression in the interiors, including the black metal staircase leading to the first floor, the giant steel fireplace, and smaller furnishings and accessories such as the metal lamps in the kitchen and the glass-fronted refrigerators with copper handles.

To balance the starkness of the loft motifs and create a cozy, warm atmosphere, the interiors feature natural wood (primarily light oak and cedar) in the form of furniture and parquet floors. Natural stone (e.g., countertops in the kitchen and bathroom) and soft textiles in various rooms were also present.

Most of the built-in furniture, fixtures, and accessories were designed specifically for this property – a prime example is the freestanding worktop in the center of the kitchen. It was crafted by local craftsmen. The steel structure is enhanced by an authentic butcher's countertop crafted from a fine walnut variety.
